

National Dogwood

National Chinese Dogwood features showy clusters of light green flowers with creamy white bracts held atop the branches in late spring. It features an abundance of magnificent red berries from early to mid fall. It has green foliage throughout the season. The pointy leaves turn brick red in fall. The peeling gray bark adds an interesting dimension to the landscape.

Reaches 25 feet tall and wide.

Full Sun to Partial Shade

Water regularly to maintain evenly moist soil - weekly, or more often.

- Do provide organic matter when backfilling rootball, adequate mulch layer and protection from hot afternoon sun.
- Do use sharp, clean tools when pruning; ragged stems and branches from dull tools leaves your plants open to various pest and disease.
- Don't plant in an exposed site; dogwood is typically found as an understory plant, protected from high winds and harsh sunlight.
- Don't neglect to thin the interior over time; dogwood thrives with good air circulation to interior structure.
